About the Course

Is there a more important task for a teacher, than to teach literacy well?

A teacher of literacy has to:

- Foster oral language, as the foundation and wellspring for reading and writing skills
- Teach children to read fluently and well, off which they will take flight into whole new worlds as effortlessly as young birds take to the sky
- Let them start writing, no matter what, as the water does not flow until the faucet is turned on

These are the three pillars of literacy, the focus for every teacher of literacy, and the means through which every child can realise his or her full potential.

This course will inspire, assist and support you to:

- Conceive and compile an effective oral language programme for your class
- Devise and arrange the elements of a comprehensive reading skills programme
- Create and assemble an effective and comprehensive writing skills programme

Across the course we present the pedagogy, principles and practices that drive effective literacy teaching; the actions and activities that make it interesting; and the assessments that help you decide how well they are doing, and how well you are doing.

If you are looking to lift your literacy practice, then this course is for you.

If you are looking for fresh new ideas, or even some twists on old ones, then this course is for you.

If you are looking to realise a promise to yourself to simply do a little better, then this course is for you.

Enrol today, and action all those aspirations!
